

On 1 January 1986 in Hiroshima, Japan, three staff members each swam two kilometres in the frigid waters around the sacred Itsukushima Shrine on Miyajima Island.

HIROSHIMA
1 JANUARY

Left to Right: Shraddha Howard, Sunil Davidson and Adhiratha Keefe

to draw attention to 1986 as the UN "International Year of Peace." They hope that by making this effort in addition to their usual work, they will remind others of the need for individual contributions to peace.

Left to Right: Shraddha Howard, Sunil Davidson and Adhiratha Keefe

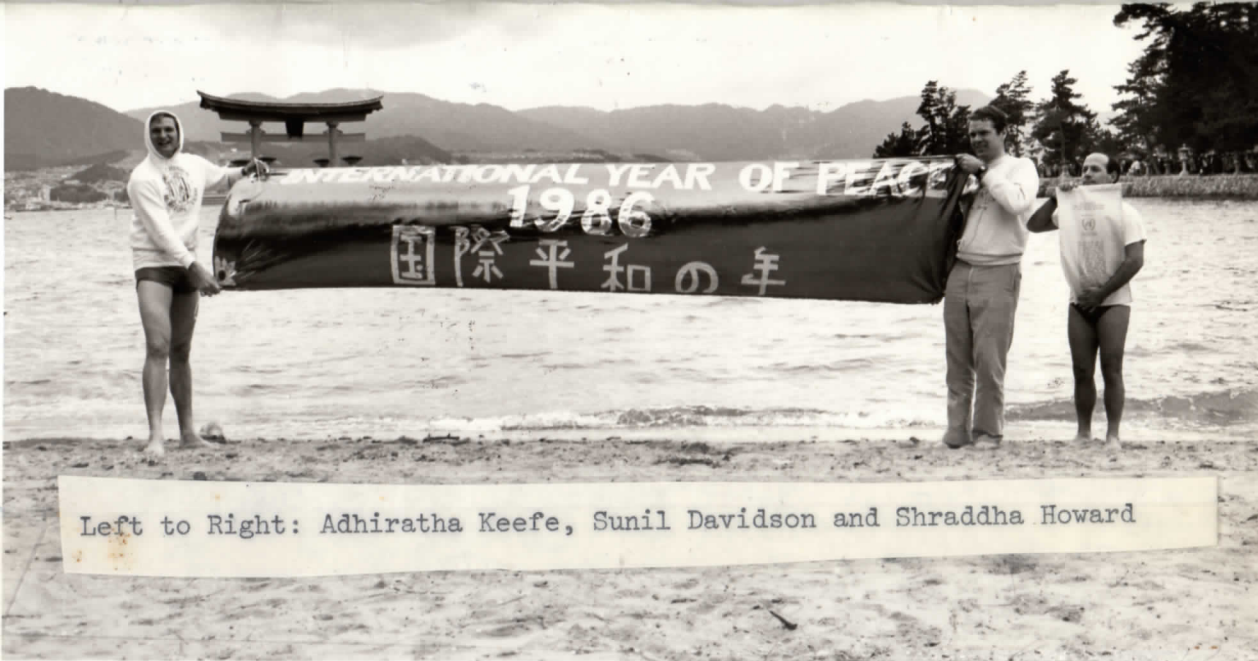

Left to Right: Shradha Howard, Sunil Davidson and Adhiratha Keefe

people and the media, and the overwhelming response of the Japanese again on 6 January. This time we chose the Nagasaki Harbour, we swam Hall supported the swim and the encouragement of our colleagues. The City for the event. Members of a 400-year-old cold-water swim club entered the water for the bonfire to keep us warm on land, and some children entered the water in Hiroshima, the media were very enthusiastic, with four television stations and nine newspaper and radio reporters covering the event and requesting interviews.

↗
NAGASAKI
6 JANUARY

Left to Right: Adhiratha Keefe, Sunil Davidson and Shraddha Howard

Left to Right: Adhiratha Keefe and Sunil Davidson with Nagasaki Children

INTERNATIONAL YEAR OF PEACE

1986

国際平和の年

Left to Right: Adhiratha Keefe, Sunil Davidson and Shradha Howard

せ

か

い

へ

い

わ

Left to Right: Adhiratha Keefe and Sunil Davidson with Nagasaki Children